“In a world in which nations once capable of imperial burdens are no longer willing to shoulder them, it is inevitable that many of the states created by decolonization should prove unequal to the task of maintaining civil order. Such nations have achieved self-determination on the cruellest possible terms.”

Abstract

This thesis will make the case that peacekeeping operations and the doctrinal agenda they require create a strategy that, although boasting a massive bearing on the lives of civilians in conflict, does not afford for peripheral obligations such as the realisation of human security. Due to the fact that states have a fundamental responsibility to protect people’s effective gratification of their human security, the international community has to salvage national security and take on a managing responsibility regarding the conflict environment. Proper international peacekeeping operations lead to a reinstatement of the pre-eminence of human security over that of the conflict. Peacekeeping operations can be deemed an appropriate instrument to fulfil human security basic needs. To facilitate an effective response to the intricacy of the conflict environment, it is imperative for states and intergovernmental organizations to cooperate in peacekeeping operations. The approach recommended recognises conflict as one of the causes of deprivation that leads to the detriment of human security. With the aim of identifying the responsibilities of the international community that a modern conflict might require, this thesis contends an alternative peacekeeping theory, ‘a human security based approach to peacekeeping’.

The practicability of a human security based approach will be illustrated by concisely applying it to the current humanitarian and security crisis in Ukraine, and challenges inter alia the role of the United Nations, the European Union and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

---

1 It is of critical importance to emphasize that the term ‘human security’ as understood in the context of this thesis is considered in the scope of reducing the human costs of indirect and/or direct violence, as put forth by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in their ‘Human Development Report’. It is generally considered the ‘most authoritative’ definition of the concept.
Contents

ABSTRACT .................................................................................................................. V

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS ......................................................................................... VII

INTRODUCTION ........................................................................................................... 1

CHAPTER I. CONFLICT, REGIMES AND HUMAN SECURITY ......................... 9

I.A. PEACEKEEPING AND THE CONFLICT ENVIRONMENT ..................... 10
    William J. Durch and Twenty-First-Century Peace Operations .......... 12
    Alex J. Bellamy’s Next Stage and Thinking Anew ............................. 16
    Sarwar A. Kashmeri on NATO 2.0 ......................................................... 19
    Summary .............................................................................................................. 23

I.B. THE ROLE OF REGIMES IN CONFLICT ........................................... 26
    Why the United Nations has failed ......................................................... 30
    And why NATO and the EU have failed too ........................................ 33

I.C. THE ROLE OF HUMAN SECURITY IN CONFLICT ......................... 36
    A Human Security Based Approach to Peacekeeping ...................... 41
    Substance of the Human Security Based Approach ............................. 49

CHAPTER II. THE APPLICATION OF A HUMAN SECURITY BASED APPROACH .................................................................................................................. 54

II.A. THE UKRAINIAN PUZZLE ............................................................................ 57

II.B. PIECES OF HUMAN SECURITY IN THE UKRAINIAN PUZZLE ........ 64

II.C. A HUMAN SECURITY BASED APPROACH TO PEACEKEEPING AND
THE UKRAINIAN PUZZLE ....................................................................................... 72
    North Atlantic Treaty Organization ....................................................... 72
    European Union ......................................................................................... 76
    A Human Security Based Approach Applied ......................................... 80

CONCLUSION ............................................................................................................. 84

BIBLIOGRAPHY ............................................................................................................ 87
The Ukrainian puzzle: pieces of the international community and a human security based approach

Gibson, Karla Mae

https://doi.org/20.500.11825/284

Downloaded from Open Knowledge Repository, Global Campus’ institutional repository